Read the situations and give some advice using should or shouldn't.

1. That girl is riding a bicycle without a helmet. It looks dangerous.
She should wear a helmet.
2. Anna said she would arrive at 10 o'clock, but it's 10:15 and she's still not here.
You should give her a call and see what's happened.
3. I saw Jake looking at his friend's paper during the exam.
You should tell the teacher you saw him cheating.
4. Tracy always drives too close to the car in front of her.
Tracy should leave more space, or she's going to crash someday.
5. When we got to the restaurant it was full. We hadn't reserved a table.
We should have booked ahead.
6. Stacy never has any money. She pays too much in credit card bills.
Stacy should be more careful with her credit card.
7. The sign says "No Parking", but there are three cars parked here.
Someone should call the traffic warden.
8. I ate too much food and now I feel sick.
You shouldn't eat so much.
9. Nick stepped on the old woman's toe by accident.
Nick shouldn't be so careless. He should apologize.
10. I wanted to go hiking today but now it's raining. What should I do?
You shouldn't go hiking in this rain. Let's watch a good DVD instead.

What advice would you give to someone visiting Japan? Where should they go?

You shouldn't just go to Tokyo; you should visit other parts of Japan, too. I recommend a trip to Kumamoto City after a few days in Tokyo to see a different side of Japan.

What would you say to someone visiting a Japanese person's home for the first time? What should or shouldn't they do?

You should take a small souvenir to give your hosts, and also some photographs of your own home to show them. You shouldn't forget to remove your shoes when you go inside the house, and you shouldn't forget to change into the toilet slippers when you go into the toilet—and you shouldn't forget to change back out of them when you leave the toilet!
