

50 – Preview Answers

You try

Answers may vary.

Make a sentence with the same meaning using each other or one another.

1. Steve likes Karen and Karen likes Steve.

Steve and Karen like each other.

2. Paul doesn't believe anything Luke says, and Luke doesn't believe anything Paul says.

Paul and Luke don't trust each other.

3. I don't see my mum very often.

Mum and I don't see each other very much.

4. I introduced Sandra to Ted and Ted to Sandra.

I introduced Sandra and Ted to each other.

5. I can't see Erin from my office and she can't see me either.

Erin and I can't see each other when I'm in my office.

6. I call my boyfriend every day, and he calls me every day too.

My boyfriend and I call one other every day.

7. Those kids are annoying. They always fight.

Those annoying kids are always fighting one another.

8. Yesterday I saw a truck turn a corner and crash into a car that was also turning.

Yesterday I saw a truck and a car both turning a corner crash into each other.

You choose

Fill in the gaps below with each other, one another or myself, yourself, etc.

1. At Christmas in my family we always give one another/each other presents.

2. I used the money to buy myself a new bicycle.

3. Linda and Kate live near each other/one another.

4. In any good relationship, the people need to learn how to help one another/each other.

5. They saw each other/one another at the party on Wednesday.

6. When they first met they introduced themselves.

7. Those two boys are always play fighting. They might really hurt each other/one another/themselves.

8. At this company we take ourselves very seriously.

How about you?

Do you have any brothers or sisters? How often do you see each other?

I have two brothers and a sister, but now that we are all married, we don't see one another very much.

Do you have a best friend? What do you talk to each other about?

I met my best friend in high school. We often talk to each other about all the people we used to know at that time, although we have lost touch with many of them.